TOXINS IN THE WOMB

Fast blood-chemicals are studying whether exposure to environmental pollutants early in life leads to breast cancer as an adult.

BY JULIE WILSON

During a laboratory session just one mile from the White House, a team of scientists is studying whether exposure to environmental pollutants early in life leads to breast cancer as an adult.

Scientists are using data from a study of women who were exposed to environmental pollutants early in life to see if they are more likely to develop breast cancer later in life.

The blood levels of the most abundant chemical in the environment, polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs), were measured in the blood of women who were exposed to environmental pollutants early in life. The blood levels of PAHs were measured in the blood of women who were exposed to environmental pollutants early in life.

PAHs are a group of chemicals that are found in the environment and in many common products. They are found in the air, in the soil, and in many common products. They are found in the air, in the soil, and in many common products.

The folks at the San Francisco Office of Travel want you to know they're doing serious work to promote the attractions, like the Chinatown Jamboree, the Berkeley Foodways and the Richmond Winefest, before they start the busy season. And they're doing it by putting up posters, like the one below, that promote the area's attractions.

Children, like all kinds of animals, like to spend their leisure hours in some manner. Each healthy child has a definite rhythm of life, a definite number of hours of "quiet" — a period of healthy slumber which may prove to be making changes in order to function just the other time a grade of adult thinking and the social surroundings are admitted.
